WITH CONGRESS preparing to rewrite the tax code, you'll be hearing a lot about how the U.S. is the most taxed country in the world. It isn't so.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago researched the tax burdens of 34 of the world's most advanced economies. The U.S. finished among the lowest, above only Mexico, Chile, and South Korea.

At 25 percent, America was well below the 34 percent average. U.S. corporations have it even better, paying an effective average of 20 percent. Remember this when Washington

SUSPICIONS ABOUND

Without concrete evidence, Minneapolis wants to shut down massage parlor over the appearance of prostitution

Julia Wang had not owned Orchid Massage Spa in Minneapolis' Nokomis neighborhood for a full year when neighbors started tipping off city inspectors about suspected prostitution.

It seemed odd, neighbors complained, that male customers bound for the spa would routinely park their cars blocks away from Orchid, despite the availability of much closer spots. So business license inspector Beth Roberts, a former police officer with 25 years' experience, began to investigate.

In November 2016, she watched as two separate male customers walked to Orchid after parking more than a block away. To Roberts, this was typical behavior for people seeking illegal sex services. When she entered Orchid, she found that owner Wang was out for lunch, leaving the spa in the charge of a woman who couldn't provide identification as an employee, and claimed to be there for a job interview.

The woman told Roberts she was the only one present that day. However, the inspector soon discovered a male customer inside one of the massage rooms with a female masseuse, who immediately closed the door at the sight of city staff.

During that same inspection, Roberts noted the spa had a "generally cluttered, unkempt, uninviting and unprofessional appearance," storing a large amount of food, cooking equipment, clothing, personal effects, and beds. This led her to conclude that workers lived on site, another sign of possible prostitution.

Later, Roberts trawled the web for Orchid ads, discovering the spa advertised heavily on Backpage.com, "often with sexually provocative photographs and copy." Orchid had also earned a number of customer reviews on RubMaps, an erotic massage locator. The ads weren't so overt that they broke any laws, but their tone and presentation seemed to flirt with the possibility, according to the inspector.

Orchid's business license expired on January 1 of this year. When Wang attempted to renew, Minneapolis Business Licenses staff recommended against it. So Wang appealed, denying having done anything short of running a legitimate business.

She points out that the street parking immediately outside Orchid is only valid for one hour, which doesn't do her customers any good when the typical massage itself is an hour long. As for the beds, clothing, and personal items found in the back room, Wang says she provides a lounge for her workers to rest up after tiring shifts, nothing more. And while she admitted to being careless by leaving a prospective employee with poor English in charge of the spa while she went out to lunch on the day of the inspection, Wang also criticized the city for failing to provide an interpreter while questioning the woman.

"I think it's not fair," Wang says. "I'm an honest business owner. I am Chinese, I am yellow, but that doesn't mean all the Chinese massage parlors are engaged with prostitution, or that all Chinese women in the massage business are likely engaged with prostitution."

Julia Wang claims she didn't know Backpage was an oasis of sex ads.

GETTY IMAGES

It would be one thing for the city to shut down businesses over firm evidence of illegal activity, Wang says. But it's another to insinuate she has committed a crime without proof.

An administrative hearing was held on May 30, with city hearing officer Michael Sindt finding the inspector's hunches more credible than Wang's explanations. He also recommended that the city cut Orchid loose.

The community development and regulatory services committee will hear Wang once more this week before considering whether to deny her application to resume business. —SUSAN DU

COLIN MICHAEL SIMMONS

A PEACEFUL VETERAN WHO ONLY WANTED TO WELCOME MUSLIMS FACES A YEAR IN JAIL

AGAINST the GRAIN

by Mike Mullen

The facts of the case are not in dispute.

On a Sunday in January, a crowd of about 1,000 people arrived at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport to protest the Trump administration's Muslim travel ban.

Mike Madden intended to be among them. But the 62-year-old and his wife heat their St. Paul home with a wood-burning stove, and he had log-splitting to do.

"If you go against the grain, it's a lot of work," advises Madden, gripping a 16-pound maul. "If you go with the grain it's a lot easier."

It was 3 o'clock by the time his wife, Gail, dropped him at the airport. Finding no demonstrators in sight, Madden staged a one-man protest, walking up and down the baggage claim carrying a chest-sized sign. "MUSLIMS WELCOME," it read.

Some arriving passengers nodded. The rest looked through him. As he passed by a group of East African airport workers, two made eye contact, mouthing the words "Thank you."

Eventually Madden learned the protest had moved to another part of the airport. He tracked it down at precisely the moment a policeman barked into a bullhorn: Anyone who didn't leave immediately would be arrested.

As other protesters jammed into an airport tram, Madden hung back. He was "informed" or "instructed" to leave eight times, according to a criminal complaint. By about the fifth time, they were quibbling over the method: Madden wanted to wait for Gail to pick him up. The cops wanted him to take the next train.

As an officer forcibly escorted his charge—"tense and resisting"—toward the light rail station, Madden quit complying. "I'm not going," he said. "Go ahead and arrest me." So they did.

In the annals of crime, no caper sounds less exciting than The Man Who Wanted a Ride Home from His Wife. It's a little more interesting than it first appears.

Madden was born in 1955 to a large Irish Catholic family in northeast Minneapolis. "One

COLIN MICHAEL SIMMONS

Mike Madden, 62, faces up to a one-year sentence for alleged criminal trespass at the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport.

older brother," he says with a wry smile. "Seven sisters."

Mom worked as a nurse, his father as a first-rate auto mechanic when alcoholism didn't get in the way.

Madden took after his big brother, an outspoken protester of the Vietnam War. But Mike wanted a way into college. He waited until after the Paris Peace Accords were signed in 1973 to join the Air Force, and served five years fixing radios and radar systems.

Madden enrolled at the University of Minnesota to study Spanish and Latin American history.

"Before that, I had kind of swallowed all that stuff about America purely being a force for good," Madden says. "College opened my eyes."

He eventually dropped out to become a cab driver, then a house painter. He now makes ends meet as a contractor and handyman. Madden travels by bike, and gets work by word of mouth. He's restored five neighborhood homes, and is hard at work on a sixth.

He knows the news better than most of the people who make it, casually citing the number of a congressional resolution or the percentage of energy a 20-year-old project generated by polluting indigenous Canadians' land.

As a member of Veterans for Peace, Madden has protested against Iraq Wars, drone strikes, Guantanamo Bay, and the imprisonment of Chelsea Manning. He can't imagine another way.

"It's high drama," Madden says. "I want to live life fully engaged in this world. I'm going to be a part of it all."

Madden says he went to the airport that cold January day because he was "offended by the clear religious discrimination." The ban, he concluded, would do more harm than good.

"The 'war on terror' is perceived abroad as a war against Islam," he says. "And Trump's Muslim ban reinforces the idea that it is a war on Islam."

Gail is quieter. "She writes more letters to her elected officials than anyone," says her husband. She would prefer he take the prosecutors' offer after his airport arrest: plead guilty, pay a $100 fine, and agree not to "trespass" at the airport again for 12 months.

That would've been the easy way. It's working against the grain that's hard. "It's about the principle," Madden says. "I didn't do anything wrong."

In March, Madden refused a plea deal from the Metropolitan Airports Commission's private attorneys, who essentially

"I want to live life fully engaged in this world," Madden says. "I'm going to be a part of it all."

act as prosecutors-for-hire. So they upped the charge, accusing him of "trespass on critical public service facilities."

Noted First Amendment defender Jordan Kushner thinks his client is being punished for not giving in.

Kushner also represented Michael Morey, who sat down in the middle of the airport's dropoff section, deliberately stopping traffic. Morey took a plea deal, and a judge reduced his offense to a petty misdemeanor, the equivalent of a traffic ticket.

It's one of those curiously American forms of injustice. "You can face a lot more punishment if you're innocent," Kushner says.

The lawyer has filed a motion to dismiss Madden's case, arguing he'd gone to the airport to "publicly express his opinion on an issue... at the center of a national debate." Madden was not interfering with airport business, Kushner asserts, and says authorities cannot dictate how a person vacates a given location.

Madden's first court date is scheduled for August 17. If the case isn't dropped or thrown out, he faces up to a year in prison and a $3,000 fine. For carrying a little sign that says Muslims are welcome, and for trying to catch a ride home with his wife.

It's the sort of abuse of power that makes people rush to protest. So long as the day's fire wood is chopped, Mike Madden would be first in line.

Seven non-beer cans for your summer cooler

BY HANNAH SAYLE

For as far as we've come toward a more nationally notable dining scene, the coasts still have the edge. Case in point: the canned cocktail.

Within the past year, nearly every food and lifestyle magazine has swooned over cocktails in cans. Tantalizingly convenient, the premixed caipirinhas and French 75s tease a summer filled with poolside frivolity, riverfront shenanigans, and lakeshore gaiety. Or at the very least, drunk-ass picnics.

So how painful it was to bring a list of the sexiest new canned cocktails into several local liquor stores, only to be met with, at best, blank stares, and at worst the simultaneously belittling and discouraging question: "Where did you even get that list?"

Sigh. Clearly, I got it from the cocktail-addled imaginations of the coastal elite.

But fret not, landlocked brethren, we've still got options. Below are seven canned drinks to try while we wait for the luxury of the east and the west to converge over the nation's thirsty midsection.

flavors,” as if giving the world of malt beverages a healthy kick in the pants. That’s not exactly the health tonic we’d recommend, but the carrot/aloe/mango flavor is surprisingly drinkable. Does it taste like a melted peach Jolly Rancher? Maybe a little. It’s lightly carbonated, with the sweetness of a nectar that effectively masks the malt aftertaste. Steer clear of the more ambitious but less successful pineapple/lime/cilantro variety, which awkwardly clashes the bitter flavor of the malt with herbal cilantro and tropical fruit.

6 WHITE CLAW

BLACK CHERRY, 5% ABV

All hail the dawn of the boozy seltzer water! While some other brands’ bitter aftertaste and fake fruit flavor dampen the magic of the low calorie count, White Claw’s black cherry flavor balances booze and fruit essence perfectly—almost too perfectly. You could get very, very drunk on these. If that isn’t your goal, go slow and mix some virgin seltzer in from time to time for good measure. No matter what, you’re keeping your calorie intake low (110 per can!) and your party quotient high.

5 BRAVAZZI HARD SODA

BLOOD ORANGE, 4.2% ABV

If you love the sophisticated sodas of San Pellegrino, but you’re tired of sneaking off to the kitchen to funnel in booze from your hip flask, Bravazzi hard Italian sodas (in grapefruit, limonata, and blood orange flavors) will make your habit a bit easier. Unlike the spiked seltzers, Bravazzi isn’t so concerned about calorie counts, but the result is a thoroughly quaffable refreshment. The sugar cane brewing process makes this naturally gluten-free and the flavor bright and sweet, with some blood orange bitterness to avoid cloying.

4 UNDERWOOD

THE BUBBLES, 11% ABV

When you need to make a toast but you’re too comfortable in your inner tube to pop a bottle and fill a champagne flute, reach for a cold can of the Bubbles. This sparkling Chardonnay from Underwood is a portable, potable party with notes of “ripe citrus, tropical fruit, and white flowers.” It’s dry and refreshingly effervescent, and double the booze of other cans on this list.

3 JOIA SPIRITS

SPARKLING MOSCOW MULE, SPARKLING GREYHOUND, SPARKLING COSMOPOLITAN, 6-7% ABV

We're giddy over our local soda company stepping in to fill the void of canned cocktails in the Midwest—even more so because these flavors are actually tasty. You'd expect as much from a company that breezes past standard pop flavors in favor of Grapefruit Chamomile Cardamom and Ginger Apricot Allspice. For its debut cocktails, Joia opted for classics with contemporary buzz: the Moscow Mule, the Greyhound, and the Cosmopolitan. We were instant fans of the Moscow Mule, which nails the thirst-quenching double-whammy of fizz and spicy ginger. The Greyhound plays on the easy-drinking mix of vodka and grapefruit to instantly delight. The Cosmopolitan was perhaps our least favorite, simply for its syrupy sweetness, but if the cranberry-vodka combo is your drink of choice, you'll find this one a passable substitute for the real deal.

2 CUTWATER SPIRITS

GIN & TONIC, 6.2% ABV

Cutwater Spirits is the latest canned cocktail to enter the Twin Cities market, starting last week. From the beer wizards behind San Diego's Ballast Point Brewing, the extensive line (gin and tonic, bloody Mary, rum and cola, cucumber vodka soda, vodka mule, etc.) could easily fill a cooler with enough variety to suit all tastes and occasions. Though the spectacularly spicy Bloody Mary (10% ABV) passes muster and a Rum & Cola (7% ABV) is a smooth and sweet sipper, the Gin & Tonic is the clear standout of the bunch, blending an aromatic gin with bright grapefruit and cucumber tonic and effervescence that lasts. We could see many hours knocking these back on a shady patio, no glass or lime wedge necessary.

1 SLOW & LOW ROCK & RYE

42% ABV

Aiming to impress with your canned drink of choice? Hands-down the best can on this list, Rock & Rye is a tiny package that packs a craft cocktail bar's worth of quality—and booze. This slow-sipper mixes rye whiskey with raw honey, navel orange, and Angostura bitters, like an Old Fashioned in a can. It goes down smooth enough to drink straight, or you can pour it over ice if you're feeling fancy. At $3.50 a pop, this tippie is a much better deal than most bars around town will cut you.

WHERE TO SHOP:

Joia Spirits and Juicebar are available at most area liquor stores. Big-box retailers should have your Bravazzi and White Claw. For Underwood, call ahead to your favorite shops; we had success at France 44. Cutwater is making its way into the market and as of press time was available at Surdyk's, Wayzata Wine & Spirits, and Stinson Wine, Beer, and Spirits; Slow & Low is available at Total Wine & More.

WHAT WE'RE LOOKING OUT FOR IN THE FUTURE:

We may not have them in the Twin Cities yet, but these buzzed-about cocktail cans are on our radar: Novo Fogo Sparkling Caipirinha; Pampelonne French 75; Can Can Cocktails' small-batch White Linen and Boar's Bourbon Root Beer out in California; Mighty Swell Sparkling Cocktails from Austin, Texas.

MOSHE KASHER AND NATASHA LEGGERO: THE ENDLESS HONEYMOON TOUR

THE WOMAN'S CLUB OF MINNEAPOLIS

"This is kind of like a big couples counseling," says Moshe Kasher of his Endless Honeymoon Tour with wife Natasha Leggero. The comedian couple first toured together roughly a year and a half ago after they got married, and are now bringing their wedded bliss to Minneapolis. Individually, both Kasher and Leggero have been busy as of late, with Leggero's Another Period preparing to start its third season on Comedy Central, and Kasher recently wrapping the first season of his talk show, Problematic. While they will each perform individual standup sets, perhaps the best part of their show is when the couple comes together and brings other couples onstage to help troubleshoot their relationships. "We end up either helping couples or humiliating them," Kasher continues. That spontaneity ensures that every show is unique, though Leggero is quick to point out they have some unspoken rules for choosing volunteers. "If they are drunk or too enthusiastic, we don't want that," she says. "We don't want to share the stage." From lack of connection to why buying a vibrator for a birthday is a bad move, the topics that couples choose to explore are all over the map. But in the end, we assume this is one of those cornball clichés like, "a couple who laughs together, stays together!" right? "My therapist actually warned me to not work with my partner," says Leggero. Whoops. 7 p.m. $30. 410 Oak Grove St., Minneapolis; 612-813-5300. —PATRICK STRAIT

COMEDY

MOSES STORM

ACME COMEDY CO.

Comedy fans may remember Moses Storm from season nine of Last Comic Standing, the one in which Minnesota's own Andy Erikson competed. He can also be seen in the romantic comedy The Wedding Party and the thriller Unfriended, as well as the Hulu series 4 to 9ers. Traveling the country is nothing new to Storm. When he was four, his single mom sold their house and bought a converted Greyhound bus. Along with his mom and four siblings, he trekked across the U.S. doing missionary work. "We slept on homemade bunk beds," he recalled on Last Comic Standing. "These were basically shelves that children slept on." Onstage today, he still jokes about his family and friends. "I think you can tell how bad your friend's alcohol problem has gotten by how much they rave about Uber. 'Uber has revolutionized the way I travel,'" he says, imitating an inebriated friend. "No, your DUI revolutionized the way you travel." 18+. 8 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday; 10:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. $15-$18.

DROP DEAD GORGEOUS

LAKE HARRIET BANDSHELL

Head over to Lake Harriet Bandshell this week for a viewing of Brittany Elizabeth Hallman's classic '90s black comedy, Drop Dead Gorgeous. Set in the fictional town of Mount Rose, Minnesota, the movie was filmed in the Twin Cities, so there's lots of fun to be had spotting familiar locations. The story follows Kirsten Dunst as a beauty pageant contender with a heart of gold. Watch her battle it out with her small-town frenemies. The flick features pitch-perfect performances by

Ellen Barkin, Denise Richards, Brittany Murphy, and Amy Adams (in her film debut!). Who will win the Sarah Rose Cosmetics Mount Rose American Teen Princess Pageant? Come find out, after hearing live music from local band Tony Peachka. 7 p.m. (movie at dusk). Free. 4135 W. Lake Harriet Pkwy., Minneapolis; 612-661-4785. —SHEILA REGAN celebrate the end of its multi-year, multimillion-dollar restoration project with happenings for kids and grown-ups alike. Each morning, there will be free yoga sessions on the lawn. Head inside and sign up for a group tour detailing the building's upgrades, or head into one of the rooms hosting lectures, which will cover topics such as Minnesota beer history, local folklore, and our music scene past and present. Outside, families can play in the Kids' Zone and adults can enjoy cocktails on the loggia. Live music and performances are also scheduled, with a Prince dance party on Friday night and sets from Cloud Cult and Polica on Saturday evening. Fireworks cap off the first two days of celebration around 9:30 p.m. For a complete lineup and additional info, visit mn.gov/admin/capitol-grand-opening. 7:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. Friday; 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday; 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Sunday. IRISH FAIR OF MINNESOTA

HARRIET ISLAND

From the Friday night kickoff party onward, the Irish Fair of Minnesota remains dedicated to the proposition that revelry is an essential component of Irish cultural appreciation. Annually held on Harriet Island, this three-day celebration pays homage to those of Irish descent, retracing customs of the distant past to contemporary traditions. Visitors can expect to encounter workshops focusing on the rich lore of Irish musical forms, speakers recounting the tumultuous history of the country, and intriguing displays of artifacts. If all that sounds a tad academic, rest assured the fair offers ample diversions, including ongoing dance performances (and tutorials) amid a procession of international musical entertainment ranging from traditional folk balladeers to pub rockers. As always, an enormous assortment of food and drink vendors will be available for a delectable feast of Irish cuisine and beverages. One new option will undoubtedly command the attention of foodies; the Celtic Kitchen will feature a series of cooking demonstrations and competitions. For more info, visit www.irishfair.com. 3 to 11 p.m. Friday; 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. Saturday; 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday. Free. 200 Dr. Justus Ohage Blvd., St. Paul; 651-266-6400.

MODUS LOCUS

The Twin Cities comic and zine scenes are bursting with creativity. That includes series and works created by female, queer, and POC cartoonists. For the past couple of years, folks have seen this demonstrated at the Twin Cities Zine Fest, an exceptionally inclusive event. Now, works from such artists will be showcased at Modus Locus at their summertime group show. The exhibition, curated by Caitlin Skaalrud, will highlight five emerging talents. Texas transplant Alex D. Araiza explores being homesick in his strip, while Fiona Avocado takes readers through topics ranging from current events to alternate universes. Minneapolis-based Ana Hinojosa, born in the Dominican Republic, explores Caribbean Latinx cultures and identities, and has contributed to the feminist teen/young adult publication Rookie Magazine. Coryn LaNasa plays with autobiographical and extraterrestrial elements. Rosemary Valero-O'Connell,

RON FUNCHES

THE CEDAR CULTURAL CENTER

Ron Funches has embarked on a circuitous route to fame. Though he's experienced in front of the camera, his latest endeavors have been commercial disappointments (a Bruce Willis vehicle, Once Upon a Time in Venice, floundered, as did the promising TV comedy Powerless). Even if the projects failed to take off, each has provided evidence of Funches' irresistible charisma. In fact, the underperformance of such works could prove all the best for audiences, as Funches has directed his energies back to where he truly shines: the standup stage. With his conversational amiability and insightful ruminations on social absurdities, Funches has honed his disarming persona as he muses on the oddities of everyday existence. Unlike many comics, however, Funches evinces a decidedly uncynical view of the world, focusing on his amazement at such cultural tropes as pop-culture obsessions, unfortunate tattoo choices, and the rise of robotic powers. Funches demonstrates a masterful delivery, leisurely working his way through hilariously off-kilter observations, pausing only in anticipation of each cleverly constructed (and irresistibly witty) punchline. With an air of perpetual amusement, Funches is always eager to let audiences in on the joke. All ages. 7 p.m. $26. 416 Cedar Ave. S., Minneapolis; 612-338-2674. —BRAD RICHASON

BEER/GOVERNMENT CAP UNTAPPED

MINNESOTA STATE CAPITOL

You may be able to get a sixer on Sunday now, but beer is back on topic at the Capitol this Saturday. As part of weekend festivities, more than 40 breweries will gather to celebrate the completion of a four-year, $310-million renovation to one of the city's most notable structures. It's not every day you can legally get tipsy on the Capitol lawn while rubbing elbows with state leaders. Breweries will line Capitol Mall, pouring their Minnesota pride for attendees. After the two-hour beer sampling party, enjoy live sets from Cloud Cult and Polica topped off by a fireworks show. Cap Untapped is sponsored by the Minnesota Craft Brewers Guild, which also handles the Autumn Brew Review next month. Tickets and more info can be found at www.tempotickets.com/CapUntapped. 21+. 4 to 6 p.m. $25. 75 Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd., St. Paul; 651-296-2881. —LOREN GREEN

The work on exhibition in this show—by Patricia Canelake, Will Bentsen, Jeff Millikan, and Jennifer Nevitt—couldn't be more different in terms of intention, subject, media, and execution. The new paintings by Jim Hittinger and Shannon Estlund in this joint exhibition are the antithesis of August: dark, lush, and foreboding in a time of cool water, hot sun, and light-drenched color. Whether recreating a rich tangle of deep forest or a procession of politically charged objects against a sparse background, the artists' works project a quiet reprieve from summer enthusiasms. There are elements of the unknown, the unexplained, and the mysterious embedded in these pieces. Try not to lose yourself in their depths. ANGELO TSAROUCHAS

RICK BRONSON'S HOUSE OF COMEDY

When we spoke to comedian Angelo Tsarouchas last summer, he had just returned from doing a series of shows in Greece. In the past year, he has continued working overseas, mostly in the Middle East. "I've been doing shows in Britain and also in Dubai and Qatar," he says. "All those places the Donald is not too crazy about." Only about half of his audiences in those countries are expatriates. "A lot of the locals speak English and were educated in the U.S. and U.K.," he notes. "Working overseas, I've noticed how much Comedy Central, Netflix, and other outlets have changed the international landscape for comedians. A lot of my material really resonates with international audiences. They're really immersed in our culture." Contrary to what our president would lead you to believe, many in the Middle East love us. "In Qatar, you'll see an Applebee's in Arabic," Tsarouchas adds. "They say, 'I want to go to America, I want to go to New York and San Francisco.'" It's been a great source of material. "I even tell them, 'I'm here to get new material,' and they laugh." 18+; 21+ later shows. 7:30 p.m. Wednesday through Friday; 9:45 p.m. Friday; 7 p.m. Saturday and Sunday; 9:30 p.m. Saturday. $13-$22. 408 E. ICEHOUSE

Sachiko "La Chayí" Nishiuchi is back at Icehouse this Sunday, along with guest flamenco dancer Xianix Barrera from New York City. Together, they'll be making some noise with their feet and stirring hearts and emotion with their bodies. A 2017 recipient of the McKnight Dancer Fellowship, La Chayí hails from Osaka, Japan, and studied flamenco in Spain before returning to her old stomping grounds here in the Twin Cities. Over the past year, the flamenco dancer has graced the stage at Icehouse for her traditional Alma Flamenca performances, sharing her own interpretations of the classic form. The casual setting at the Icehouse makes for a perfect date night, as you can sip some wine and grab a bite to eat while watching these masters perform. TOWERING INFERNO

The long-awaited film adaptation of Stephen King's Dark Tower saga is a flaming pile

Idris Elba
and Tom Taylor

ILZE KITSHOFF

BY TONY LIBERA

If you've been following the behind-the-scenes saga of The Dark Tower movie, it will come as no surprise that the film adaptation of Stephen King's magnum opus is bad. The project had been in limbo since 2007, passing from J.J. Abrams to Ron Howard in 2010 before ultimately landing in the hands of director Nikolaj Arcel. Post-production rumors further raised red flags and, sure enough, The Dark Tower has proven a movie that will both disappoint King's faithful and perplex newcomers to the tale.

The Dark Tower story spans eight books. The Dark Tower movie spans 95 minutes. Rather than shoot for a direct adaptation of any one book, the filmmakers opted for a mishmash of events depicted at various points in the epic and then took additional liberties.

Obviously any film adaptation is going to require some tweaking and paring, but what we get here is a crude patchwork of what is, in writing, a vast mythology—and the end product is a hurried and shallow simulacrum that fails to stand on its own.

The film version tells the story of Roland Deschain (Idris Elba) through the eyes of a boy named Jake Chambers (Tom Taylor). Jake has been plagued by nightmares since his father died: visions of another world, a Man in Black (Matthew McConaughey), and the gunslinger Roland, an alternate-universe cowboy-knight sworn to protect the Dark Tower from falling. When some evil goons come to kidnap Jake, he finds a way to cross dimensions and runs into Roland, who's now on a quest to kill the the Man in Black.

There's not much of anything worth seeing here. The story comes out like word vomit. The CGI looks years behind. The action sequences are mostly unimaginative. Matthew McConaughey dials his McConaugheyness to 11 even though he's playing an evil sorcerer, which is a constant distraction.

The only enjoyable part of the film is Idris Elba, who is so supremely talented he could play a shoe in a movie and it would somehow be badass and compelling. Here he imbues Roland with both an awesome power and a reserved helplessness that gives at least some nuance to a world of one-dimensional characters. The only thing he doesn't quite nail is Roland's obsession, but that has more to

directed by Nikolaj Arcel area theaters, now showing do with the movie's overall shortcomings than it does with Elba's performance. And Elba's strong portrayal is yet another great fuck-you to adaptation purists who believe a character originally written as white, like Roland Deschain, can't be anything other than white.

It's a shame The Dark Tower couldn't be more. There's so much source material from which to draw, so many ambitious ideas to explore had the movie been reined in. We could've had a Harry Potter-type franchise here. But given how poorly The Dark Tower was executed, it'd be a shock to see anything else come of it. C+

STAGE READING

Brush up on these books before heading to the theater

VIMVERTIGO

BY JAY GABLER

Read it before you see it: Movie buffs know to keep an eye on trailers so they can finish classic novels and the latest bestsellers before they hit cinemas. A batch of books are coming to local stages this season, too. Here are a few tomes to consider for your final summer reads before the curtains rise.

Don Quixote, Miguel de Cervantes

MAN OF LA MANCHA, THEATRE LATTÉ DA, SEPT. 13-OCT. 22

Read one of the world's greatest books, and you'll have valuable context for the 1964 musical that's being given a provocative staging at the Ritz Theater. Director Peter Rothstein plans to set his production in an immigration holding center, giving new resonance to the play-within-a-play that originally imagined the author awaiting a hearing with the Spanish Inquisition.

Of Mice and Men, John Steinbeck

PARK SQUARE THEATRE, NOV. 9-DEC. 16
Annie Enneking directs a new production of this Park Square staple, the story of displaced migrant workers during the Great Depression. Steinbeck's 1937 novella has proved readily adaptable to film and stage. You'll probably want to pack some Kleenex.

The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time, Mark Haddon

MIXED BLOOD THEATRE, NOV. 10-DEC. 3
This 2003 novel was turned into a 2012 play that uses elaborate effects to take viewers inside the mind of Christopher, a boy with autism who sets out to solve the mystery of a murdered dog. A high-tech touring production came to the Orpheum last year; a more intimate local staging might help correct that show's intentionally overstimulating excesses.

Pride and Prejudice, Jane Austen

MISS BENNET: CHRISTMAS AT PEMBERLEY, JUNGLE THEATER, NOV. 18-DEC. 30

This 2016 comic play by Lauren Gunderson and Margaret Melcon is an unusual sort of literary adaptation: Its events take place two years after those described in the beloved 1813 novel. Mr. and Mrs. Darcy (um, sorry if that's a spoiler) are hosting the extended Bennet family for a holiday gathering, and you'll be best positioned to catch all the references if the book is fresh in your mind.

Candide, Voltaire

ARTISTRY, MARCH 1-3

Leonard Bernstein's 1956 musical adaptation of Voltaire's 1759 satire is getting a concert staging in Bloomington—although, disappointingly, not in the form of a site-specific production at the Mall of America. Find an annotated text if you want to fully appreciate the allusions to events like the 1755 Lisbon earthquake; regardless, your theatrical book club will have plenty of philosophy to puzzle over on your drive down I-35W to the “best of all possible worlds.”

Kids' classics

The Children's Theatre Company likes to stage plays that began as books, and this season that means How the Grinch Stole Christmas (Nov. 7-Jan 7); The Wiz (Jan. 23-March 18, with Penumbra Theatre); Corduroy (March 6-May 13); and another Dr. Seuss joint, The Lorax (April 17-June 10). EP

SONGS OF HIMSELF

After years of making other bands sound better, Jeremy Ylvisaker releases his first solo records

BY ERIK THOMPSON

Jeremy Ylvisaker

If you're a Twin Cities music fan, chances are you've heard the guitar work of Jeremy Ylvisaker—but never quite like this.

Ylvisaker's two new instrumental collections, Dimebag and Malibu Hymnal, are the veteran local musician's very first solo albums. With both electric flourishes and spare acoustic melodies, the guitarist conveys emotions as varied as vulnerability, loneliness, and affection.

The six acoustic songs on Malibu Hymnal have a relaxed, summertime vibe, as though listeners are sitting around a fire pit hearing Ylvisaker play tenderly as the sun sets over the lake. Dimebag is an experimental concept album about the death of Pantera guitarist "Dimebag" Darrell Abbott and his burial with Eddie Van Halen's guitar beside him. The material was culled from 10 years' worth of recordings made at multiple locations, from Andrew Bird soundchecks to Micheal "Eyedea" Larsen's studio. Each song is a fond ode to the musicians Ylvisaker has worked with over the years, who have taught him more than they'll ever know.

"I never went to college," Ylvisaker says over coffee on a beautiful summer morning in Minneapolis' North Loop. "But all my friends—Andrew Bird, Martin Dosh, Andrew Broder, Ryan Francesconi, Mikey Larsen, JT Bates, Mike Lewis—they are like my professors. Learning from them was my college. Those guys are just impossibly inspiring people. I feel like I want to dedicate this to everybody who showed me how to do stuff."

Ylvisaker has turned that quality education into an impressive music career. He's performed with renowned artists like John Prine, Justin Vernon, Jenny Lewis, Eyedea and Abilities, Haley Fog, and Mark Mallman. And in addition to his current gigs with the Suburbs and Andrew Bird, he plays with his own bands: Alpha Consumer, the Cloak Ox, Gramma's Boyfriend, and Guitar Party (fronted by his daughter, Mijah). A few months back, Ylvisaker was an artist-in-residence at the Eaux Claires music festival. Makes you wonder how he found time to record two solo albums.

"I've actually started and never finished a ton of things in the last 15 years," Ylvisaker says. "I just kept making things but never finishing anything. The initial part of Dimebag came together really fast, and then I, of course, never finished it. Over the years, I just kept making things that fit with the sound of it and the vibe of it perfectly. So then I had all these CDs laying around with all these ideas on them. Finally, with the help of many engineers—Alex Proctor, in particular—we organized all those into a semi-cohesive thing. With the other one [Malibu Hymnal], I just started playing the acoustic guitar a bunch, and suddenly I had a lot of that music too. So one night I went down to Littlebig Studio with Brent Sigmeth, and knocked that out in a couple hours. So suddenly I had two finished things, what do I do? So I decided to put them out at the same time. One took 10 years, one took two hours."

Both albums offer unfiltered glimpses into Ylvisaker's imagination. Malibu Hymnal's "Website Creek" has a wistful, somber tone that evokes walking away from a bad situation to a new place full of possibility and potential, while the mournful, finger-picked chords of the title track suggest both loss and love. The title of "Bob Ross Saying Maybe," which belies the somber nature of the tune itself, is perhaps a nod to producer Mike Lewis' penchant for comically naming the songs he composes for his jazz band, Happy Apple.

"I just want everybody's day to be happier and more calm," Ylvisaker says of his creative aims for these releases. "The word 'sentimental' is kind of taboo in the world of a creative person, but I feel there is a proper way to engage with that real feeling."

Malibu Hymnal has a casual, easy-going charm, but also a rare emotional depth. "It's a nice day, just bring your guitar outside and mess around with open tunings," Ylvisaker says of the album's overall vibe and the leisurely way the songs came together. "Feeling your way through them, they just become tunes. I just wanted to dare myself to do it. I'm an electric player, and I'm usually in a band where I'm not accountable for the content at all. So it was just like, 'All right, dude. Can you do this?' The only way to do that is not think about it too hard, and do it quick."

Dimebag is a more unconventional, eclectic collection, with Ylvisaker joined on various tracks by Tim Glenn, Lewis, Dosh, Bates, and Broder. The avant-garde tonal excursions "Diamonds in the Sky," "Hazer," "Dusk," and "Rust" have an ominous, Lynchian quality, while the melancholy Steve Earle cover, "Goodbye" (recorded by Eyedea in his studio), is the most straightforward song found on either album. Dimebag's centerpiece is the droney, eight-minute epic, "VH II (The Elder)," which captures the moment that Dimebag's Kiss-themed coffin slowly descends into his grave. "I see this elder being lowered into the ground, and this crazy, mystical lighting, and this guitar resonating forever," Ylvisaker explains.

After years of ceding the spotlight to his talented collaborators, Ylvisaker isn't fazed by having the attention placed squarely on him. "How I take the pressure off is realizing that this isn't 'impressive' music," Ylvisaker says. "It's not necessarily that it's boring, but it's like looking at a lake. There's big waves, there's millions of little waves, it's one shape, there's a few colors,

CRITICS' PICKS

RODNEY CROWELL

DAKOTA, THURSDAY 8.10, FRIDAY 8.11
Since arriving in Nashville 40 years ago, Rodney Crowell has been a prolific, reliably first-rate songwriter, playing an outlaw mix of country, rock, R&B, and honky-tonk while making astute observations about treacherous relationships, characters, and times. Crowell assesses his life at age 66 on his latest album, the intimate and reflective Close Ties, singing about his hardscrabble youth, his long-lost flames, and his loneliness. Much of the music is acoustic, ambling folk—a bit somber, but, with a string quartet occasionally weighing in, consistently rich. "Nashville 1972" reminisces about wild, distant days hanging with Guy Clark and Mickey Newbury; "I'm Tied to Ya," a duet with Sheryl Crow, is a live-for-today love song; and "It Ain't Over Yet" perfectly juxtaposes nostalgic self-examination with resilient determination to carry on, the latter featuring pointed verses sung by ex-wife Rosanne Cash. 7 p.m. $40-$50. 1010 Nicollet Mall, Minneapolis; 612-332-5299.

—RICK MASON

HERBIE HANCOCK

MINNESOTA ZOO, FRIDAY 8.11
From bop to funk to electro-pop, with numerous groundbreaking stops in between, Herbie Hancock has been a virtuoso keyboardist, genre-jumping innovator, unlikely hit-maker, and all-around musical guru for the past half-century. Hancock spent five years with Miles Davis in the 1960s, led the jazz-funk fusion band Headhunters and the all-star Miles alumni group V.S.O.P. in the '70s, and landed on the charts in the '80s with "Rockit," an avant-garde mix of industrial funk, jazz, and hip-hop. Hancock's first full-band tour since 2011 features longtime associates Lionel Loueke on guitar and Vinnie Colaiuta on drums, plus bassist James Genus and saxophonist Terrace Martin. Martin is also producing a new Hancock album with performances from younger cutting-edge jazz musicians Robert Glasper, Derrick Hodge, and Kamasi Washington. Expect a preview of new material, plus Hancock nuggets like "Chameleon" and "Cantaloupe Island." 7:30 p.m. $75-$103.50. 13000 Zoo Blvd., Apple Valley; 952-432-9000. —RICK MASON

Belle and Sebastian

PIZZA LUCÉ BLOCK PARTY

PIZZA LUCÉ, SATURDAY 8.12

Despite the fact that no Hold Steady song mentions Pizza Lucé (how can that be?), Craig Finn will headline the noted Twin Cities pizza chain's annual downtown Minneapolis block party this year, topping off an impressively deep lineup of local talent. He's joined by Allan Kingdom, whose new album, LINES, extends the St. Paul-based MC's spacey brilliance in some interesting new lyrical directions, yet still barely hints at what an electric live performer he is. Rounding out the bill is the great, now surnameless Haley (previously Haley Bonar); onetime Lizzo accomplice Sophia Eris, who's launched her own solo career and also moonlights as a Go 95.3 on-air personality; and Fury Things, the rockers whose band name spares writers the trouble of having to describe their sound. Plus pizza from Lucé and beer from Surly. With Tabah, Static Panic, Fanaka, and Modern Era. Noon. Free. 119 N. Fourth St., Minneapolis; 612-333-7359. —KEITH HARRIS

BELLE AND SEBASTIAN

PALACE THEATER, TUESDAY 8.15

Perhaps the quintessential indie-pop band, Glasgow's enduring Belle and Sebastian have successfully experimented with their core sound over the years without diluting it, as leader Stuart Murdoch's affable wit and irrepressible melodic instincts remain ever intact. Their first three albums—Tigermilk and If You're Feeling Sinister from 1996, and 1998's The Boy with the Arab Strap—are undisputed classics, and 2003's Dear Catastrophe Waitress isn't far behind. On their latest album, 2015's Ben H. Allen-produced Girls in Peacetime Want to Dance, the band displayed a clubby electronic sensibility on songs like "The Party Line" and "Enter Sylvia Plath." Though there hasn't yet been an official announcement, the band may be readying their 10th album, as a new single, "We Were Beautiful," dropped last month. Julien Baker opens. 18+. 8 p.m. $40-$50. 17 W. Seventh Pl., St. Paul; 651-266-8989. —MICHAEL MADDEN

Poly Panic

I feel sexually neglected in my three-way relationship

My boyfriend of eight months, K, and I are polyamorous. We started the relationship on that foot, and for a while I was the partner he spent the most time with. There have been ups and downs, but overall our relationship is solid and loving. However, recently we both started dating the same woman, L, and they have been spending more time together than with me due to my work schedule. They both reassure me that they love me and care for me deeply, but I am an anxiously attached person and sometimes I have panic attacks when they spend more time with others/themselves and fear that they're going to leave me. I'm working on becoming more secure via books on cognitive behavioral therapy, and I'm looking into in-person therapy. This is my first serious relationship, but not his (I'm 22, he's 35). And while K has been super patient with me, my worry and grasping is a point of friction in the relationship. K has told me he doesn't want to be solely responsible for my sexual satisfaction and my need for constant reassurance. The anxiety has been flaring up most strongly concerning sex—we're all switches, and K and L are both professional Dominants. I feel neglected if K doesn't penetrate me but he penetrates L, or if L gets to penetrate K via a strap-on and I don't. He's very good about voicing what he desires, while I'm learning to speak up despite feeling like I'm just being needy and grasping again. I love both my partners, but I've been feeling sexually neglected—and with a HIGH sex drive, it's been quite painful. This is my first "trio rodeo" and I really want to make it work—I've seen a future with K for a while (the I-want-your-children kind), and L is joining those future visions. How can I find a way to create more opportunities for sexy-time and not ruin it with anxiety attacks?

BDSM ENTHUSIASTIC LOVER ON VOYAGE 4 EMOTIONAL DURABILITY

I'm always suspicious when two (or more) people claim to be deeply in love after dating for a short period of time, BELOVED, and eight months qualifies as a short period of time. Premature declarations of love—to say nothing of premature commitments—up the emotional stakes, which can place a strain on a newish relationship that it may not be strong enough to bear. Not yet.

You'll feel a lot less anxious about this relationship, BELOVED, if you make a conscious effort to lower the stakes. In other words: Dial it way back, girl.

You've been dating K for a little more than half a year, and L for whatever "recently" adds up to in a world where eight months equals LTR. It'll reduce your anxiety levels and soothe your insecurities if you tell yourself you aren't committed to K and L as life partners. Not yet. This is the beginning of these relationships. All you're committed to right now is continuing to get to know K and L. You're committed to dating them, you're committed to exploring where this might go, you're committed to enjoying your time with them, however long it lasts.

But you are not committed to them. Either of them. Not yet.

Committing yourself to therapy is a good idea, BELOVED. Everyone should commit to working on their emotional and mental health. You and your therapist can start by reevaluating whether a poly relationship is right for you in practice. In theory, you understand poly and you may want a poly relationship. (Particularly if it's the only way you can have K.) But as someone with anxiety issues and hang-ups about all sex acts being divided up equally, poly may not be right for you, or it may not be right for you right now. After a little therapy (or maybe a lot), who knows? (Also: Trying to portion out sex among three people like you would ice cream for three small kids—making sure each kid gets the exact same number and size of scoops—is unrealistic. Sometimes you'll get more; sometimes you'll get less. Eyeing those scoops too closely is only going to generate conflict.)

You've been at this rodeo for only eight months, BELOVED, and if these problems are already coming up, it might not be your attachment style or your anxiety. It's possible this rodeo isn't for you.
